

TWO WOMEN AVOID OPERATIONS

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Chicago, Ill.—"I must thank you with all my heart for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I used to go to my doctor for pills and remedies and they did not help me. I had headaches and could not eat, and the doctor claimed I had female trouble and must have an operation. I read in the paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I have taken it and feel fine. A lady said one day, 'Oh, I feel so tired all the time and have headache.' I said, 'Take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound,' and she did feel fine now."—Mrs. M. R. KARSCHNICK, 1438 N. Paulina Street, Chicago, Illinois.

The Other Case.
Dayton, Ohio.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound relieved me of pains in my side that I had for years and which doctors' medicines failed to relieve. It has certainly saved me from an operation. I will be glad to assist you by a personal letter to any woman in the same condition."—Mrs. J. W. SCHERER, 126 Case St., Dayton, Ohio.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

ALBUQUERQUE NOT SO BADLY FIXED AS TO PRICES

Sugar Flour and Coffee Up,
But no Change in Retail
Meat Prices and None Looked For.

While there has been an advance in the cost of foodstuffs and such staples as sugar and coffee have been sharply advanced, Albuquerque doesn't face a nightmare of rising prices. If the reassuring words of a big meat dealer are borne out, retail meat prices here have been unchanged, he said this morning, and no advance is anticipated. Wholesale prices here have actually gone a bit lower, he said, and there isn't any shortage of supply in sight.

Albuquerque is more fortunately situated than most other cities in regard to the meat business. Butchers here have local sources of supply and are not dependent on receipts at distant packing houses. Albuquerque housewives get meat cheaper than their sisters in every other city between "Prisco and Chicago."

The only change in prices looked for here at this time are such natural fluctuations as govern the quotations on chickens and other valuable meats. Pork, for instance, is subject to almost weekly change in price at all times.

Sugar has soared more than any other staple. There was an additional rise yesterday in the wholesale price, and sugar now sells for $3.30 more a hundred pounds than it did before the European war began. The advance is explained by the fact that about 46 per cent of our supply of beet sugar comes from Germany, and a reduction of beet sugar acreage in this country due to the tariff revision, the two things meaning a big prospective shortage. Wilnot Booth, manager of Gross Kelly and company's big wholesale house, in discussing the sugar situation, said those interested should read an article in the August "Pearson's" Magazine, for a very clear statement as to the real sugar market conditions.

Coffee—all grades—has advanced two cents a pound at wholesale, and flour has gone up 25 cents a hundred pounds at wholesale.

Just at present whether the consumer pays more for such staples as coffee, flour and sugar depends on the retailer. If the latter happens to have a good-sized stock of such staples on hand, and feels that it is a good business measure to sell at the old price until the stock is lowered, there will be no advance for his customers right now; if he hasn't the stock or doesn't feel like holding to the old quotations, there will be an advance. In either case the retailer will have to come to the advance eventually, if the wholesale rates remain up or keep climbing.

Domestic sardines have been advanced 35 cents a case, but it was said by a big wholesaler today that no general advance in canned goods was anticipated at this time. Most of these goods are contracted for in the spring. Should the high price of sugar continue, canned fruits will undoubtedly mount in price when the present pack is disposed of. Sardines, so far, because the sources of supply from foreign countries are shut off by war, and a big shortage is in sight.

One of the biggest bakers in the city said today that while flour had advanced, the breadmakers of the city had not considered the question of reducing the size of the loaves. Whether continued advance in the price of sugar would affect the price of cakes and pies was a matter, he said, to be decided as circumstances dictated. Bakers would base their prices on such things as the cost of all the ingredients entering into them.

ROSENWALD SAYS WAR WILL HELP UNITED STATES

Department Store Man, Back from New York, Points Out Immediate Benefits to Industry in this Country.

MEANS NEW INDUSTRIES
FOR AMERICAN LABOR

"Nobody wants war; as a destructive force it is bound to be harmful in the long run, but in New York financial and industrial interests see in the European conflict material and immediate benefits for the United States of a far reaching nature."

This was the summary of the effect of the European war on the United States made by S. C. Rosenwald, of the Rosenwald brothers department store, who returned last night from a stay of six weeks in New York City where he has been buying goods.

"Of course everybody regrets the European conflict," said Mr. Rosenwald this morning, "but business, at least in New York City, sees in it enormous benefits for the United States. It is certain to result in the establishment of industries in this country to supply demands heretofore supplied from Germany and Austria and France and which Americans must have. I could cite a great many lines of manufacture, but I think nothing could illustrate what I mean better than the matter of toys."

Our firm was one of the very few in the west to place orders a year ago for German manufactured toys, for which we have a large demand. The manufacture of high grade mechanical toys is confined almost entirely to Germany and Austria. Our supply of toys for the Christmas trade arrived in New York a week before the war began. But for that we would have had to pay double for the imported toys, if we could have secured them at all. There will be very few German and Austrian toys on the market this year, outside of hold-over stock. If the war is long continued next year will see none of these imported toys at all. But our people must have mechanical toys. The children demand them. What American children demand they get. The result is plain; we will begin manufacturing toys and hundreds and hundreds of people will find employment in making them.

"I was shown a manufacturing plant for wax flowers for bridal and burial wreaths and other decorative purposes. It was a small plant, started the week war was declared. The demands on it are so great that I was assured it would be a huge industry in New York within a month. These wax flowers heretofore have been made exclusively in Austria. They can be made here just as well; we simply hadn't done it, the foreigners having established the market."

"Take the matter of dyes. We can make as good silks in this country as they can make in Germany and France, for the raw materials come from Japan. But we cannot dye them as the French and Germans do, and therefore our women demand imported silks. Heretofore all the fine dyes have been made and used abroad. We will now make and use them at home, because we have to."

These are just instances of manufacturing needs heretofore supplied from European markets which we will supply ourselves if the war is long continued. I mention them because they are in lines with which I am familiar. In steel products, certain kinds of machinery and hundreds of other lines, we will have to supply ourselves and every item in this long list means a new industry."

"On the other hand I am assured by business men in New York that the demand for our products, food and manufactures will be so great abroad that we can sell them almost at our own price. This alone would mean enormous benefit. The development of a merchant marine is bound to follow a long continued war, as well as the establishment of trade relations with the South American countries heretofore supplied from Germany, England and France."

"Excitement in New York ran high immediately after the declaration of war. Germans paraded the streets demanding fair treatment and fair judgment for Germany. Other nations paraded and for a time the gathering crowds were permitted to march around. But this was soon stopped. In Herald square one night a German reservist who grew too enthusiastic in his patriotism was shot and killed by someone in the crowd. The closing of the stock exchange averted a ruinous panic. Now, while the exchange remains closed, business conditions have settled down almost to normal and prompt action on currency and the protective measures of the big banks has saved the situation. The general feeling in New York now is one of greatest confidence and optimism. There is a rush to buy imported goods. Buyers are falling over each other to get in before the market goes farther up. The raises include almost everything in general merchandise and the increases are from ten per cent up. I employed assistants to aid me in doing buying which I ordinarily do alone, and while I got to New York well before war was declared and had done most of my buying before the excitement started, we had an exciting finish."

The National Women's Trade Union league is at the head of a movement to establish a national training school for women organizers, the object being to place trained organizers in the field to organize the women workers in all trades and occupations.
